"Monk Jump Over the Wall" Soup with Sea Cucumber, Abalone, Dried Scallops, Ginseng and Chinese Herbs

There's a reason this dish was on the Emperor's menu. This soup has a tantalizing mix of abalone, fresh fish maw, shitake mushrooms, dried scallop, sea cucumber and deliciously aromatic Chinese herbs. We cook it the traditional way - except for the shark fin, which we've happily replaced with tasty black chicken. It's boiled for no less than 18 hours. The broth is also cooked with renowned Yunnan ham, prized in Chinese cooking for flavouring soups and stews. Yunnan's cold climate means the ham can be dry-cured for at least eight months to three years allowing the meat to mellow, mature and develop the amazing savory umami flavour.

Legend has it this soup was once made by a farmer. The smell wafting in the air was so mouthwatering that when the farmer was gone, a monk jumped over the wall to steal it. When the Emperor heard the story he demanded to try it; the soup became his favourite. If it's fit for an Emperor, then it's fit for Shanghai Mansion guests.

Sticky Rice Steamed in Chinese Herbs topped with Crabmeat

Another dish difficult to find on menus these days since it takes time and precision. The sticky rice is soaked for no less than 3 hours to achieve the right consistency. The rice is then fried with a delectable mix of yellow bean sauce, tender pork neck meat, Chinese herbs and dried cod until the rice is cooked, absorbing all the delicious flavours. The finishing touch: fresh marinated crab.

Hot and Sour Szechuan style soup with seafood
This iconic Chinese soup's origins is hotly debated. Some say it came from Hunan, others contend the spicy and tangy flavours are a nod to classic Szechuan style. No matter, this soup is enjoyed across China and is a must for aspiring epicureans. Our ode to Szechuan's most famous soup showcases the bite of Chinese white peppercorns and the tangy and sweet flavour of Chinkiang vinegar -- both added after cooking.

Chilled Sake-infused Crabmeat salad with Shredded palm heart and mushrooms.

For millennia, the South China Sea and China's serpentine network of rivers has endowed the country's cuisine with robust assortment of seafood. Succulent white crab meat long been a delicacy for the Chinese palate, and our chef upped the ante by infusing it with Japanese sake. Tossed with shredded heart of palm and mushrooms, the salad is bright and lively, balancing the marine, salty flavour with sake's earthy and fragrant profile. The dish is our homage to Chinese traditional cooking, with a modern twist!

Snow fish fillet

In a typical Cantonese kitchen, food preparation mimics the industry and speed of commerce. Wok frying, steaming, grilling – all done in high heat and high speed. Our generous snow fish fillet is prepared in classic Cantonese style - rapidly steamed and served in a light, lively soy sauce. A long-standing favourite among Red Rose Restaurant's patrons, the dish is light and nuanced, without compromising flavour and substance.

Signature Dish

Steamed Rice in Lotus Leaf

The broad, beautiful lotus leaf is a wonderful tool for wrapping -- and it enhances food with a subtle earthy flavour and floral aroma. This recipe is inspired by Lo Mai Gai or 'pearl chicken', a type of dim sum served in southern China, where rice, Chinese sausage, chicken and lotus leaves and spices are wrapped in lotus leaves and steamed into delicious treat. Our chef's version is equally mouthwatering. Jasmine rice, marinated chicken, organic lotus seed, premium Chinese sausage and Thai dried shrimp are wrapped in lotus leaves and steamed in the our secret stock recipe, which takes over 24 hours to make. The result - an exotic, mouthwatering meal.
