Salta

The most northern wine regions in the country are also home to the highest vineyards in the world, reaching over 3000m asl. The hot days and cold nights allow the production of high quality grapes and wines: Tannat, Malbec and Cabernet Sauvignon for reds, and Torrontés for whites with Sauvignon Blancs from this region. Rich, concentrated and intense flavors of the wines made this region famous.

Yacochuya Malbec 2010, Calchaqui Valleys 1480

San Juan

Is known as the second largest wine producing region in Argentina after Mendoza, with the main focus on red wines based on Syrah. Considered for many years as 'the future' of San Juan, together with Malbec and Bonarda Argentina, all grapes enjoy the hot and dry conditions there. The quality improves year after year and the producers, located in the Pedernal Valley, take great benefits of this cooler sub region. In comparison, Zonda Valley and Tulum Valley are the hotter areas, giving more voluptuous wines.

Mendoza Luján de Cuyo and North-East

Maipú and the eastern region are the warmest and lower in altitude, usually giving more generous ripeness, spices and concentration, being home of some of the oldest vineyards in Mendoza. Luján de Cuyo and its sub regions give us what we know as "The Classic Malbec that Everybody Falls in Love With", being juicy and velvety. Here, Las Compuertas and Vistalba, Agrelo and Perdriel are regions to look at.

Mendoza

Uco Valley & San Rafael

On the way south, Uco Valley is known as a cooler area that is higher in altitude, with very complex soils that produce some of the most vibrant wines in the country, with elegant, floral and fresh expressions. Names like Paraje Altamira, Vista Flores and Gualtallary are some of probably the most significant ones in the valley. The most southern region in Mendoza is San Rafael, with lower altitude vineyards and a strong heritage from Italian immigrants.

Mendoza's Regions Combined

For most of the wine consumers, Mendoza is the most recognisable wine region, since it produces approximately 70% of the country's total. The balance between the warm and cold areas has been one of the most traditional ways of blending in the 'Province of the Sun and Good Wine'. Today, we experience one of the most important eras in winemaking in Argentina, with a very terroir-focused mentality, remaining one of the best countries in the world for premium wine.

Buenos Aires

Is one of the newest wine regions in the world, first planted in 2007. Still a very small area, but with lots of potential as a coastal region due to the influence from the Atlantic Sea, perfect for short ripening period grapes, such as Albariño that also grow in Galicia. The cooling effect is also beneficial to Chardonnay and aromatic grapes such as Riesling and Gewürtztraminer, and Pinot Noir for red wines.

Patagonia Neuquén & Río Negro

The rivers allow life to blossom in this considerably dry and constantly windy area, where humidity never goes higher than 30%. With more hours of sun than in the rest of the country, this region is home to some of the oldest vineyards of Pinot Noir, Merlot and Riesling in the world, all located in Río Negro. Malbec and Cabernet Sauvignon have also been planted there for many decades. Neuquén is a rising region for both, volume and quality, with some of the most ambitious investments in the country, in a place only known for apples, cherries and pears productions until 2000.
