Salta

The most northern wine regions in the country are also home of the highest vineyards in the world, reaching heights over 3000m asl. The hot days and cold nights allow the production of high quality grapes and wines. Tannat, Malbec and Cabernet Sauvignon for reds, while Torrontés for whites, but keep an eye on Sauvignon Blancs from this region. Rich, concentrated and intense expression in the wines made this region famous, but is the seek of freshness the current trend among the winemakers.

San Juan

Second largest wine producing region in Argentina after Mendoza, the main focus is in red wines based on Syrah, considered for many years 'the future' of San Juan, together with Malbec and Bonarda Argentina, all grapes that enjoy the hot and dry conditions there. The quality improves year after year, and the producers located in the Pedernal Valley, are the responsible for this, with the benefits of this cooler sub region. Zonda Valley and Tulum Valley are the hotter areas, giving more voluptuous wines.

Mendoza

Luján de Cuyo and North-East

Maipú and the East region are the warmest and lower in altitude, usually giving more generous ripeness, spices and concentration, being home of some of the oldest vineyards in Mendoza. Luján de Cuyo and its sub regions give us what we know as "The Classic Malbec that Everybody Falls in Love With", being juicy and velvety. Here, Las Compuertas and Vistalba, Agrelo and Perdriel are regions to look at.

Mendoza Uco Valley & San Rafael

On the way south we have Uco Valley, where most of the producers are focused at. A cooler area and higher in altitude, with very complex soils producing some of the most vibrant wines in the country, with elegant, floral and fresh expression. Names like Paraje Altamira, Vista Flores and Gualtallary are probably the most significant in the valley, but not the only. The most southern region in Mendoza is San Rafael, with lower altitude vineyards and a strong heritage of Italian immigrants.

Mendoza's Regions Combined

For most of the wine consumers, Mendoza is the most recognisable wine region, what makes sense since it produces more or less 70% of the country's total. The balance between the warm and coolest areas have been one of the most traditional ways of blending in the 'Province of the Sun and Good Wine'.

Today, we are experiencing probably the most important moment in winemaking in Argentina, with a very terroir-focused mentality, and remaining one of the best countries in the world to drink wine from.

Buenos Aires

One of the newest wine regions in the world, being first planted in 2007. Still a very small area, but with lot of potential as a coastal region due to the influence from the Atlantic Sea, perfect for short ripening period grapes, such as Albariño that also enjoys this in Galicia. The cooling effect is also beneficial to Chardonnay and aromatic grapes such as Riesling and Gewürtztraminer, and Pinot Noir for red wines.

Patagonia Neuquén & Río Negro

The rivers allow life to exist in this dry and constantly windy area, where humidity never goes higher than 30%. With more hours of sun than in the rest of the country, this region is home to some of the oldest vineyards of Pinot Noir, Merlot and Riesling in the world, all located in Río Negro. Malbec and Cabernet Sauvignon are also planted there since many decades. Neuquén is a rising region for both, volume and quality, with some of the most ambitious investments in the country, in a place only known for apples, cherries and pears production until the year 2000.
